died on the steamer Baltic in mid-ocean at 1 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, according to a cablegram re ceived here today from Rufus Gaynor, his son

News of his death was received here in a message sent by wireless and cable to Robert Adamson, his secretary, by Rufus W. Gaynor, his son who sailed with him.

The message read as follows "Father died Wednesday at o'clock, due to heart failure. Notify Mayor Gaynor salled away from New York, a fast failing man, on the morning of September 4. An hour before he sailed, only one man, his secretary, knew of his plans outside of members of his immediate family. The mayor's announced purpose was a brief vacation on the ocean. He felt that the tonic effect of the sale air would restore in some measure his

The Baltic was due at Queenstown today. The mayor died as he was hearing the other side. The news of his death was sent from Cuxhaven by Rufus W. Gaynor and relayed from Cuxhaven to New York by cable. Mayor Gaynor left New York at a time when the city was seething in one of the strangest municipal political conditions in its history. The day before his departure was notified on the City Hall steps by representatives of independent political organizations that they had chosen him as their standard bearer in the mayoralty campaign. crowded City Hall park assembled to hear him accept. 1851. He had to help the family there in its struggle for existence, and in this fight he had to take time for his own education. He graduated from the Whitestown seminary, went to Boston to teach school, and afterwards studied law in the office of Ward Hunt of Utica, who later became a justice of the supreme court of New York. In 1873 young Gaynor went to Brooklyn and became a news paper reporter. Two years later he was admitted to the bar.

From that moment until his death Gaynor has lived in the midst of con-tinual political warfare. He started it with an attack on the lawless sa loons in Flatbush, a section of Brooklyn. Ten years later he led a successful fight against the so-called McLaughlin ring in Brooklyn, His battle against John Y.
